

Introduction to Humanities – C100

Course Feedback

Overview

This introductory humanities course allows students to practice essential writing, communication, and critical thinking skills necessary to engage in civic and professional interactions as mature, informed adults. Whether through studying literature, visual and performing arts, or philosophy, all humanities courses stress the need to form reasoned, analytical, and articulate responses to cultural and creative works. Studying a wide variety of creative works allows students to more effectively enter the global community with a broad and enlightened perspective.

Learning

Getting Started

Welcome to Introduction to Humanities! In this course you will use MindEdge, a learning resource that includes module notes, videos, slideshows, practice opportunities and summaries. The pacing guide, located at the bottom of this page, provides a recommended plan for tackling this material. One difference in studying humanities compared to other courses is the focus on themes and on how examples, works, and major figures relate to those themes. The optional study guide found in the Course Information section below has been created to help you with this thematic approach.

Before you begin the course, please take a few minutes to watch a special message from your College. Select the video below that corresponds to your College.

This course includes a pre-assessment, an objective assessment and two performance assessments. You may take the pre-assessment at any time to assess your understanding of course concepts and to determine if you are ready for the objective assessment. The pre-assessment will provide you with a coaching report that will help you target the topics where you have more to learn.

Competency on the performance assessments is evaluated with associated rubrics that describe expectations of your work. Watch the short, fun Rubric Video (to the left) to learn how to use the rubrics effectively.

In addition to these resources, course instructors are also available to answer questions and discuss concepts of humanities.

Cohort Sign-up

Cohorts provide additional structure and support for challenging aspects of this course. In a cohort you receive specific homework assignments and meet online with mentors and students regularly to discuss the challenging topics.
