The graduate analyzes major learning perspectives that underlie educational practices.

The graduate uses information processing and other memory models to understand learning.

The graduate understands information processing, self-regulation, and generalized learning strategies and can apply knowledge of strategies to effective strategy instruction.