The graduate has a deep understanding of the axiomatic nature of Euclidean and non-Euclidean geometry; understands the power of the axiomatic method; and understands the interplay between algebra and geometry through vector, coordinate, and transformational geometries; and understands and applies the various important methods of geometrical proof.